Cyprus gas: who will steal Aphrodite's heart?

Europe's endeavours to diversify gas supplies sources have continued apace in the past weeks. The TAP consortium, which comprises Norway's Statoil, Germany's E.ON and Swiss Axpo, was selected to ship Shah Deniz phase 2 gas to southern Europe this week. The restart of shale drilling in the UK has made the headlines and the topic of security of supply was yet again high on the agenda of May's European Council. But far from the big headlines, other stories have been unfolding.
