Security of supply in Southeast Europe: The EU's white whale?

The delivery of Caspian gas through the Southern Gas Corridor has been touted as the solution to Southeast Europe's security-of-supply woes. But without significant upgrades to the region's gas network, supply security in the Balkan Peninsula may yet be a pipe dream. Gas Matters considers Southeast Europe's options ahead of the launch of new Caspian gas flows, and asks whether security of supply is attainable in markets that still bear the hallmarks of their Soviet past.
