Russia eyeing first leg of Turk Stream pipeline in 2019 – state media

The Turk Stream pipeline may be back on the cards, with Russian and Turkish officials expecting the first leg of the four-line project to be constructed by late 2019 following a meeting between Vladimir Putin and his Turkish counterpart Recep Erdogan, Russian media reported this week.

Russian energy minister Alexander Novak told state media that parties on both sides had agreed in St Petersburg this week to establish a working group focused exclusively on the proposed 63 Bcm/year pipeline project.
