COP 22 climate talks begin as US election looms

Officials from nearly 200 countries gathered on Monday in Marrakech, Morocco for the latest round of UN climate talks, but many are worried about the result of tomorrow's presidential election in the United States.

Some have suggested that the enshrining of the historic Paris Agreement on climate change in international law on Friday was hastened in part to thwart any potential attempt by Republican candidate Donald Trump to pull the US out of it should he become president.
