Coal prices to fall as demand stalls in US and Europe – IEA forecast

The unexpected spike in coal prices this year will likely be short lived, as global demand for the mostpolluting fossil fuels stalls over the coming five years, the International Energy Agency (IEA) said in its latest five-year coal market forecast.

Coal's share of the world primary energy mix could fall to 27% in 2021, from 30% today, despite the fuel accounting for 45% of energy-related CO2 emissions, the body predicted.
