Australia's gas industry faces mounting pressure at home

The development of Australia's gas sector currently hinges on a raft of LNG export projects that will attract more than $A170 billion ($US17visual_editor billion) in investment over the next decade. But industry executives are most preoccupied by local rather than international issues, surrounding the implications of the exploitation of vast unconventional coal seam gas (CSG) and shale resources. Gas Matters delves into developments down-under.
