German energy and water association cautious on shale gas

Germany’s Federal Association of Energy and Water (BDEW) on Monday presented its first position paper on unconventional gas developments to the German parliament’s Environment Committee. BDEW – which represents 1,800 companies covering 90% of Germany's gas sales and 80% of its drinking water – said it supported shale development in Germany “in principle”, but only “provided environmental and safety issues do not preclude it”.
