Chinese government plans huge hike in gas demand by 2020

The Chinese government aims to more than double natural gas demand over the next six years, a new state energy strategy published on Wednesday suggested. The fundamental pillars of the country's energy development plan for visual_editor014-visual_editor0visual_editor0, outlined on the central government's website, are the promotion of natural gas, nuclear, and renewables as primary energy sources and creating a strong, but limited role for coal.
