IGas wins local approval to frack in UK midlands

Independent producer IGas became the third company to win the right to hydraulically fracture in the UK this week after local authorities in Nottinghamshire county granted permission to drill two exploration wells.

“We, as well as other onshore operators around the country, are trying to establish if the significant quantities of gas that we have identified exists in the right formations to be commercially prospective and address the issue of security of supply that we face,” said IGas CEO Stephen Bowler.
