US lawmakers draft LNG Bill to 'slash red tape and seize global export opportunity'

US lawmakers have launched a Bill dubbed the “LNG Now Act”, which aims to slash red tape that is supposedly holding back a second wave of US liquefaction projects.

Louisiana Republican senator Bill Cassidy introduced the License Natural Gas Now Act in the Senate last week. It also has the backing of congressman Clay Higgins who brought it before the House of Representatives.

The bill aims to expedite LNG export approvals by removing unspecified "barriers"
