LNG Canada on high alert after worker tests positive for Covid-19, self-isolates

A worker at the Shell-led LNG Canada project in British Columbia has tested positive for Covid-19, sparking calls from opponents to shut down the site to reduce the risk of contagion. Work is continuing for now, albeit on a skeleton crew and under strict healthy, safety and hygiene rules that minimise human interaction.

The individual, who has not been identified in line with official privacy guidelines, experienced ...
