Oil hit a fresh 13-month high on Monday, with the front-month WTI price settling in the USD 60/barrel range. The month-ahead Brent price recorded a gain of USD 0.87/barrel to settle at USD 63.30/barrel.

The crude price rally was driven by major production curtailments in the US Lower 48, with oil production in Permian shale play reportedly down by 1 million barrels/d on Monday. The US Gulf coast is being gripped by a severe winter storm which has shut-in large amounts of oil production in Texas as the kit deployed in the state's shale basins is struggling to operate at such cold temperatures.

Front-month European gas prices returned to the red. The month-ahead UK NBP fell by 6.9%, and the month-ahead Dutch TTF price fell by 6%, with both benchmarks settling in the USD 5/MMBtu range for the first time since December 2020.

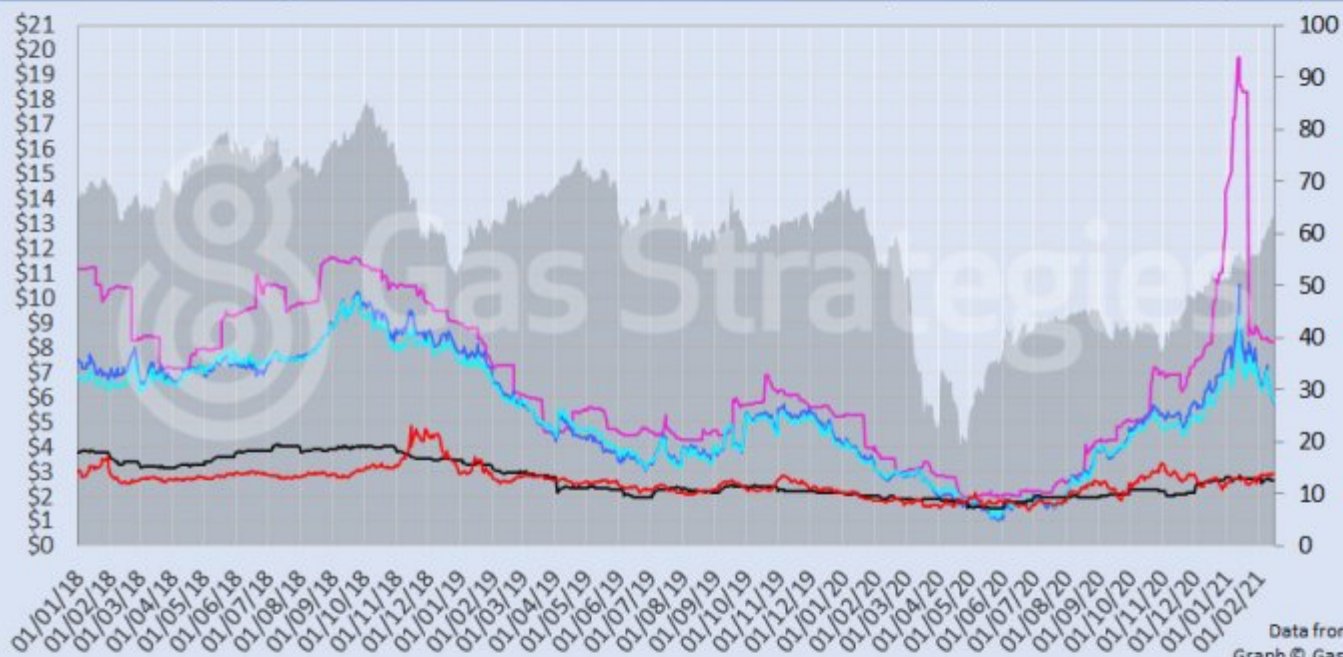

A public holiday in the US on Monday meant that the CME's month-ahead JKM, Henry Hub and AP12 coal contracts remained unchanged to start the week.

The European carbon price fell from the record high set on Friday, closing 1.3% lower to settle at EUR 39.47/tonne.
