Crude prices continued to rally on Monday despite the end of the blockage in the Suez Canal – which has helped lift oil prices in recent days.

Front-month Brent and WTI rallied by 0.6% and 1% respectively on Monday amid expectations that shipping delays will persist over the coming days or weeks after the Ever Given container vessel was successfully freed from the Suez Canal on Monday – nearly a week after the ship ran aground, blocking the waterway.

The blockage has resulted in ~370 vessels waiting to transit the waterway, however transits resumed on Monday evening. The traffic includes 16 LNG carriers and 35 crude tankers, according to shipping agent Leth Agencies.

The traffic is expected to take days to clear, which is expected to impact loadings and delivery of oil shipments – lending support to oil prices in the short term.

Also helping lift oil prices on Monday were reports suggesting Russia will support rolling over the OPEC+ production cuts into May – with OPEC+ set to meet on Thursday to decide the production quota for May.

European gas prices fell on Monday, with the front-month UK NBP and Dutch TTF contracts recording losses of 2.9% and 1.5%, respectively.

The month-ahead JKM contract also stumbled, falling by 0.9% to settle at USD 6.87/MMBtu.

US gas benchmark Henry Hub rallied by 1.1% but remained in the USD 2.5/MMBtu range.

The European carbon price continued to rally, recording a 0.3% gain to close at EUR 41.75/tonne.
