‘Gas in Europe needs to be reliable, not redundant’: Ana Maria Jaller-Makarewicz, lead energy analyst, IEEFA

Ana Maria Jaller-Makarewicz is lead energy analyst, Europe, at the Institute for Energy Economics and Financial Analysis (IEEFA), the US-based think tank whose stated mission is “to accelerate the transition to a diverse, sustainable and profitable energy economy.” In this exclusive interview, she looks back at two dramatic years on Europe’s energy stage, explains why the LNG “quick fix” pursued by many European countries in 2022 is one they may come to regret, and calls for a step-up in efficient energy consumption, “because it’s what has worked the best so far.”
